

AfriMart

African groceries, shipped to your door anywhere in the US.

Brand Identity Guide

The story of the mark, the wordmark, and the palette

Version 1.0 · Prepared by AkomzyAi Consulting Ltd · July 2026

The Brand at a Glance

AfriMart is the market from home, delivered anywhere in America. It is a shipping-first marketplace that carries the food of home to the African diaspora wherever they live — and a platform that lets African stores, home cooks, and first-time food entrepreneurs reach the whole country. The brand identity is built to feel warm, trustworthy, and quietly premium: a heritage grocer for a modern, dispersed community, not a discount app.

Personality: rooted, generous, and dignified. Proudly pan-African without belonging to any single nation. Confident and calm rather than loud. The identity carries that personality through a living, growing symbol, a grounded green, and a warm golden accent drawn from the harvest itself.

The Name

Afri — the roots. Africa and its people, the heritage and the food the whole brand exists to serve. It is deliberately pan-African: not Nigerian, Ghanaian, or Ethiopian alone, but the shared table of a continent's diaspora.

Mart — the marketplace. Plain, universal, and instantly understood: a place to buy and sell. It grounds the heritage of “Afri” in a clear, practical promise — this is where you get what you need.

Together the name is legible on first sight in any community, easy to say and spell, and it states the proposition without translation: African goods, in a marketplace, brought to you.

The Logo Mark

The mark is a sprouting seedling — two leaves opening from a single upright stem. It is simple, symmetrical, and calm, and it carries several meanings at once, each true to what AfriMart is.

Growth and new beginnings

A young sprout is the universal symbol of growth. It speaks to fresh, whole, nourishing food — but just as importantly to the brand's mission: AfriMart is a place where a home cook or a first-time entrepreneur can plant a single product and grow it into a business. The seedling is the ladder from starting out to thriving, drawn in one stroke.

Nourishment and freshness

Leaves signal the natural, the fresh, and the wholesome — the promise that the food arriving at the door is real, cared for, and good. For a grocery brand, the living leaf is an instant, wordless assurance of quality.

The central stem — the warm heart

The upright amber stroke is the core of the mark. It reads as the stem of the seedling, and echoes the pestle at the heart of African cooking and the golden grain of the harvest. Rendered in warm amber against cool green, it is the living, energetic centre the two leaves grow from — and it quietly forms the upright of the letter that ties the mark to the name.

Two leaves, one bridge

The two balanced leaves also speak to what AfriMart connects: buyer and seller, home and diaspora, Africa and America. Opening outward like welcoming hands, they carry the hospitality of a shared table. Their symmetry gives the mark stability and trust; their rounded forms keep it warm and approachable rather than corporate.

The Wordmark

The wordmark is set in two tones on purpose. “Afri” appears in calm ivory — the heritage, the roots, the steady foundation. “Mart” appears in warm amber — the active, energetic promise of the marketplace itself. The eye reads roots first, then the invitation to shop, in one glance. Paired with the seedling to its left, the full lockup says everything the brand is: African heritage, growing, brought to market.

Typographically the wordmark is a bold, rounded, geometric sans — confident and modern, but softened at the edges so it reads friendly rather than austere. It signals clarity and trust: a brand you can rely on, spoken plainly. For longer-form brand and editorial moments, the wordmark pairs with an elegant serif for headlines and a clean humanist sans for body text, giving the premium, heritage-grocer feel room to breathe.

The Colour Palette

Three colours carry the brand, each chosen for meaning as much as beauty. The values below are drawn directly from the logo.

	Market Green #1F3D2B	The primary and the foundation. Rootedness, trust, and the living green of the land and the leaf. Calm, grounded, and premium — the colour of a brand you settle into, not one that shouts.
	Harvest Amber #E8A44D	The accent and the warmth. Drawn from grain, spice, palm oil, and the golden staples of African cooking. It is energy, appetite, and welcome — used sparingly, for the moments that matter most.
	Ivory #FAF5EE	The light and the space. A warm off-white rather than a stark white, giving the brand a soft, heritage, premium feel. It is the breathing room that lets the green and amber speak.
	Ink #222222	The reading colour. A soft near-black for body text and fine detail — legible and quiet, never competing with the brand colours.

How they work together: green dominates as the ground; ivory opens the space; amber is the single warm note reserved for emphasis — the seedling's heart, a key word, one important action. The discipline of using amber sparingly is what keeps it feeling precious rather than loud.

Logo Variations and Usage

The avatar (mark on green) is the everyday face of the brand — app icon, social profile, favicon, and any small square placement. The full lockup (mark plus wordmark) is for headers, covers, and anywhere the brand is introduced. A reversed mark is provided for placing the symbol on dark backgrounds where the leaves need to read in ivory.

Do

Give the logo generous clear space. Prefer the green or ivory backgrounds it was designed for. Keep amber as an accent, never a background. Use the avatar for small, square placements and the full lockup where there is room to introduce the brand.

Don't

Don't stretch, rotate, or recolour the mark. Don't recolour the palette or introduce competing colours. Don't place the full-colour lockup on busy or clashing backgrounds. Don't use the pale reversed mark on light backgrounds, where the ivory leaves disappear.

Voice and Promise

Tone: warm, plain-spoken, and dignified. AfriMart speaks like a trusted market elder with perfect logistics — knowledgeable, generous, unhurried, and never salesy. It welcomes; it does not shout.

Tagline: African groceries, shipped to your door anywhere in the US.

Brand promise: the market from home, delivered. Wherever the diaspora lives in America, AfriMart carries the food, the flavours, and the feeling of home to the door — and gives the people who make that food a place to grow.